Hex 3501

The vast majority of this hex is the eastern arm of Penu'ím Bay, the only feature of note is a small protected harborage on the west coast of Pán Cháka. This harborage is used by pilgrims seeking to journey to the Ancient Temple of Vimúhla.

Hex 3502

This entire hex is composed of forested karst terrain. It is not as heavily eroded as the eastern edge of the Pán Cháka plateau. The terrain rises rather evenly the further east you go. A trail worn by pilgrims leads east, and another trail joins it from the north. The northern trail leads towards a Tsolyani fort on the Mu'ugalavyáni border.

This entire area has been occupied by the Mu'ugalavyáni during their incursions during the recent Tsolyáni Civil War, and Mu'ugalavyáni patrols may be encountered.
