Creating Your Armies

The Unit cards in this book allow you to assemble the armies of Tsolyánu, Mu'ugalavýá, Yán Kór, and the smaller countries to the north. You are invited to print the cards in this book for personal use.

You may print the pages containing the units you want to field and then cut out the Unit cards. You should also cut out Formation cards, which are included in the Legions of Tékumel rule book. Combine the Unit and Formation cards as shown below. The cards are designed for use with Tarot sized card holders (2.75 x 4.75 inches). Put the Unit card in first, pushing it to the bottom of the sleeve. Then slide the Formation card behind it. When you change formation, you can simply remove the Formation card and slip in a new one.

Commanders, Magic Users, Heroes, and large monsters, like Serudlá do not have formations. For these units, you only need the Unit cards.

The Army of Tsolyánu

Command

From this section you may select the commanders, magic users, and heroes for your army.

Generals

By default, Tsolyáni Commanders position themselves on elevated platforms, or dias. These structures are carted with the army on Chlén carts and assembled the night before the battle. The dias are equipped with wards that protect the General and his staff from enemy missiles and magic.

Select one Army General for your army.

Magic Users

Tsolyáni legions all have a contingent of Magic Users to provide offensive and defensive spells during a battle. For a Qadardaliqoi battle, the contingents from the legions comprising the army are gathered on a dias that is assembled next to the Commander's dias. It also is protected from enemy spells and missiles.

You may have one unit of Magic Users for your army, but they are not required.

Heroes

Heroes often represent groups of player characters who are not part of the the command or magic user units. These units may have a small effect on the battle, but it is still outsized compared to that actual number of people represented. No personal magic is may be used and magical devices are too narrow inscpe to have an effect beyond their contribution to Charge, Meleee, and Shoot factors.

You may have up to 2 Heroes selected from the options below.

The Army

Your army is composed of one or more combat units. The stats for each unit are shown in the tables that follow. Here are some guidelines for assembling your Tsolyáni army for Legions of Tékumel:

You may only have one of a particular “named” unit. Each Tsolyáni legion is listed and described below. These are unique units. No two legions are exactly the same. E.i., there is only one Legion of the Lord of Red Devastation. For this reason, you cannot field multiple Red Devastation legions.

Units that have two cards in the list below are large enough to have a left and right wing of the Legion. The numbered cohorts are shown next to the name of the Legion. You are allowed to field two units of the same Legion if they have two cards in the tables below.

“Unnamed” units can be duplicated. These are units like Levy Skirmishers, Temple Guards, Sákbe Road Guards that represent an average version of that troop type. It would be quite common to field several units of Levy Skirmishers, recruited from the surrounding farms and villages.

If there are more than two units in the army, the number of human units should outnumber all nonhuman units. While not a hard and fast rule, there are so many more human troops in the Tsolyáni army that it would be a very unusual circumstance to have an army of mostly nonhumans.

Composition of the Army

The Tsolyáni army is composed of various sorts of units, including Legions of Heavy Infantry (the most senior and revered units), Medium Infantry, Light Infantry (armed with javelins, bows, crossbows, or slings), Artillery, Specialists (Sappers, Marines, and others) and Auxiliaries (of nonhumans). In addition, armies may raise irregular levies of skirmishers from the countryside and also call up other local standing forces, such as Sakbe Road guards, City and Temple guards, and even clan para-military forces.

The table below shows the number of units recommended for a proportionally balanced army, based on the composition of the entire Tsolyani Imperial army. For example, in a force of 12 units, at most four of them should be Heavy Infantry and four should be Medium Infantry. Again, as noted previously, this is merely a guideline and deviations from this ideal would be very common.

The Army of Yán Kór

Command

From this section you may select the commanders, magic users, and heroes for your army.

Generals

By default, Yán Koryáni Commanders position themselves on elevated platforms, or diasies. These structures are carted with the army on Chlén carts and assembled the night before the battle. The diasies are equipped with wards that protect the General and his staff from enemy missiles and magic.

Select one Army General for your army.

Magic Users

Yán Koryáni Gurék (legions all have a contingent of Magic Users to provide offensive and defensive spells during a battle. For a Qadardaliqoi battle, the contingents from the legions comprising the army are gathered on a dias that is assembled next to the Commander's dias. It also is protected from enemy spells and missiles.

You may have one unit of Magic Users for your army, but they are not required.

Heroes

Heroes often represent groups of player characters who are not part of the the command or magic user units. These units may have a small effect on the battle, but it is still outsized compared to that actual number of people represented. No personal magic is may be used and magical devices are too narrow in scope to have an effect beyond their contribution to Charge, Melee, and Shoot factors.

You may have up to 2 Heroes selected from the options below.

The Army

Your army is composed of one or more combat units. The stats for each unit are shown in the tables that follow. Here are some guidelines for assembling your Yán Koryáni army for Legions of Tékumel:

- * Each Gúek is listed and described below. You may only have one of a particular unit within the Gurék, unless noted that there are multiple units of the same type. In some cases, there are multiple options for how to organize the various types of soldiers in the Gurék.
- * You may include units from other armies in a Yán Koryáni army. Yán Koryáni units must be the majority of the army.
- * You may build an army wholly from any of the allied forces. Use any but Elite of the Yán Koryáni Commanders, Magic Users, and Heroes for the leaders, etc.

Composition of the Army

The Yán Koryáni Gurék (legions) are organized, raised, trained, and paid for by the regional clans of the various cities and provinces of the country. Each Gurék has a mix of troop types, including Heavy and Medium Infantry, Lights, and in some cases Artillery and other Specialist troops. For a campaign, all or some of these units may be called up to serve, depending on the requirements of the army, nature of the terrain, who is the enemy, etc. The forces of Saá Allaquí, Milumanáya, Pijénu and Ghatón are similarly organized.

The table below shows the number of units recommended for a proportionally balanced army, based on the composition of the entire Yán Koryáni army and its allies. For example, in a force of 12 units, at most four of them should be Heavy Infantry and four should be Medium Infantry. Again, as noted previously, this is merely a guideline and deviations from this ideal would be very common.

Serudlá are allowed only if at least one other unit from that Ghatóni Gurék is included in the army. The numbers for Pygmy Folk include Heavy, Medium, and Light troops of that species.

The Army of Mu'ugalavyá

Command

From this section you may select the commanders, magic users, and heroes for your army.

Generals

By default, Mu'ugalavyáni Commanders position themselves on elevated platforms, or diases. These structures are carted with the army on Chlén carts and assembled the night before the battle. The diases are equipped with wards that protect the General and his staff from enemy missiles and magic.

Select one Army General for your army.

Magic Users

Mu'ugalavyáni legions all have a contingent of Magic Users to provide offensive and defensive spells during a battle. For a Qadardaliquoi battle, the contingents from the legions comprising the army are gathered on a dias that is assembled next to the Commander's dias. It also is protected from enemy spells and missiles.

You may have one unit of Magic Users for your army, but they are not required.

Heroes

Heroes often represent groups of player characters who are not part of the the command or magic user units. These units may have a small effect on the battle, but it is still outsized compared to that actual number of people represented. No personal magic is may be used and magical devices are too narrow inscpe to have an effect beyond their contribution to Charge, Meleee, and Shoot factors.

You may have up to 2 Heroes selected from the options below.

The Army

Your army is composed of one or more combat units. The stats for each unit are shown in the tables that follow. The Mu'ugalavyáni forces are organized according to the Four Palaces of the Square, which divide the territory of the Empire into four regions. The Legions based within the territory of the Palaces are nominally under the command of the Prince of that Palace. In practice, the command of each Palace's forces are led by the most military-minded of the clan councils. Here are some guidelines for assembling your Mu'ugalavyáni army for Legions of Tékmel:

- * You may only have one of a particular “named” unit. Each Mu'ugalavyáni legion is listed and described below. These are unique units. No two legions are exactly the same. E.i., there is only one Legion of Victorious in Vimúhla. For this reason, you cannot field multiple Victorious in Vimúhla legions.
- * “Unnamed” units can be duplicated. These are units like Levy Skirmishers, Temple Guards, Sákbe Road Guards that represent an average version of that troop type. It would be quite common to field several units of Levy Skirmishers, recruited from the surrounding farms and villages.
- * If there are more than two units in the army, the number of human units should outnumber all nonhuman units. While not a hard and fast rule, there are so many more human troops in the Mu'ugalavyáni army that it would be a very unusual circumstance to have an army of mostly nonhumans.

Composition of the Army

The Mu'ugalavyáni army is composed of various sorts of units, including Legions of Heavy Infantry (the most senior and revered units, Medium Infantry, Light Infantry (armed with javelins, bows, crossbows, or slings, Artillery, Specialists (Sappers, Marines, and others and Auxiliaries (of nonhumans. These forces are all presented by Palace in which they are based. Forces from two or more Palace may be combined into an army. This is particularly true in the Chákas, but may be for any campaign where a legion may be cross posted to join Legions of another Palace..

In addition to the Legions of the Palaces, armies may raise irregular levies of skirmishers from the countryside and also call up other local standing forces, such as Sakbe Road guards, City and Temple guards, and even clan para-military forces. These are shown at the end of the list and may be used with forces of any Palace.

The table below shows the number of units recommended for a proportionally balanced army, based on the composition of the entire Tsolyani Imperial army. For example, in a force of 12 units, at most four of them should be Heavy Infantry and four should be Medium Infantry. Again, as noted previously, this is merely a guideline and deviations from this ideal would be very common.

The Army of Livyánu

Command

From this section you may select the Priest Generals and heroes for your army.

Díodaz

Unlike the other nations, the Livyáni armies are commanded by Military Priests in contingents called Díodaz. The legions (Llüneb) of each military region (Chároneb) is commanded by a Díodaz. The Díodaz vary in size from a few hundred to several thousand. In Legions of Tékmel, the higher ranks of the Díodaz form the Command Díodaz, while the remainder serve as a combat unit in the army called the Combat Díodaz. You are not required to include the Combat Díodaz in your army, however, if you do select one, it must be from the same Chároneb as the Command Díodaz.

The Combat Díodaz are presented as two types: combat units and heroes. The combat units are assigned a size determined by the number of priests in the unit. The hero Díodaz are much smaller and so are considered Hero units. Both types can cast magic, but only the Hero Díodaz can attach to friendly units.

The Command and Combat Díodaz are presented below as pairs. You must select one Command Díodaz and may select the accompanying Díodaz as a unit in your army, as well.

Heroes

Heroes often represent groups of player characters who are not part of the Diodaz. These units may have a small effect on the battle, but it is still outsized compared to that actual number of people represented. No personal magic is may be used and magical devices are too narrow in scope to have an effect beyond their contribution to Charge, Melee, and Shoot factors.

You may have up to 1 Hero selected from the options below.

The Army

Your army is composed of one or more combat units. The stats for each legion (Llüneb) are shown in the tables that follow. The Livyáni forces are organized according to the Chároneb (Armies) which are based in the major cities and have defined recruiting areas. Forces raised within the recruiting area of a Chároneb are under the command of the Díodaz of that Chároneb. Here are some guidelines for assembling your Livyáni army for Legions of Tékumel:

- * You may only have one of a particular “named” unit. Each Livyáni Llüneb is listed and described below. These are unique units. No two Llüneb are exactly the same. E.i., there is only one Llüneb of the Shadowed One. For this reason, you cannot field multiple Shadowed One legions.
- * “Unnamed” units can be duplicated. These are units like Levy Skirmishers, Temple Guards, Sákbe Road Guards that represent an average version of that troop type. It would be quite common to field several units of Levy Skirmishers, recruited from the surrounding farms and villages.
- * If there are more than two units in the army, the number of human units should outnumber all nonhuman units.

Composition of the Army

The Livyáni army is composed of various sorts of units, including Legions of Heavy Infantry (the most senior and revered units), Medium Infantry, Light Infantry (armed with javelins, bows, crossbows, or slings), Artillery, Specialists (Sappers, Marines, and others) and Auxiliaries (of nonhumans). These forces are all presented by district (Chároneb) in which they are based. Generally, an army is composed of the Díodaz and Llüneb from a single Chároneb. Forces from two or more Chároneb may be combined into an army, but the army will be commanded by the senior Díodaz.

In addition to the Legions of the Palaces, armies may raise irregular levies of skirmishers from the countryside and also call up other local standing forces, such as Sakbe Road guards, City and Temple guards, and even clan para-military forces. These are shown at the end of the list and may be used with forces of any Palace.

The table below shows the number of units recommended for a proportionally balanced army, based on the composition of the entire Livyáni army. For example, in a force of 12 units, at most three of them should be Heavy Infantry and two should be Medium Infantry. Compared to the other major powers, the Livyáni have a higher percentage of Light troops. Again, as noted previously, this is merely a guideline and deviations from this ideal would be very common.

The Forces of Tsoléi

The military forces of the Tsoléi Isles are poorly administered, organized, and equipped, and they are dispersed among the various islands of the archipelago. The units number from a few hundred to at most a couple thousand (rarely that many) and are deployed mainly as marines and town garrisons. As such, they are not appropriate for battles using Legions of Téकुmel, which are aimed to provide simulations for conflicts with 20,000 or more combatants on a side. Rather skirmish battles and small unit actions would be more appropriate.

The Army of Salarvyá

Command

From this section you may select the Generals and heroes for your army.

The Council of Nobles

The army of Salarvyá is organized along semi-feudal lines, with the seven ancient noble families in charge of raising and maintain forces within the territories for which they are responsible. The Council of Nobles sets the number and nature of the troops to be maintained by each family.

During times of war or crisis, the King's Overlord and the High Council appoint a High Command to unify the forces and provide for centralized command.

Generals

By default, Salarvyáni Commanders position themselves on elevated platforms, or diasies. These structures are carted with the army on Chlén carts and assembled the night before the battle. The diasies are equipped with wards that protect the General and his staff from enemy missiles and magic.

Magic Users

Salarvyáni Tsélqu (strike force) all have a contingent of Magic Users to provide offensive and defensive spells during a battle. For a Qadardaliqoi battle, the contingents from the forces comprising the army are gathered on a dias that is assembled next to the Commander's dias. It also is protected from enemy spells and missiles by wards and protections.

You may have one unit of Magic Users for your army, but they are not required.

Heroes

Heroes often represent groups of player characters who are not part of the the command units. These units may have a small effect on the battle, but it is still outsized compared to that actual number of beings represented.

You may have up to 2 Heroes selected from the options below.

The Army

Your army is composed of one or more combat units. The stats for each unit are shown in the tables that follow. The

Here are some guidelines for assembling your Salarvyáni army for Legions of Tékel:

- * You may only have one of a particular unit unless noted otherwise.
- * Some Nchésh may have reserve units ready to deploy. Normally, these would be used for reinforcements and replacements for the first line units.
- * There are no levies or other para-military units in the Salarvyáni army. All the city and road guards are drawn from the standing forces of the Tséhlqu based in the area. Reserves at various stages of training may be deployed with the army or where ever additional labor - to build earthworks, built roads, repair structural damage, etc. - is needed and for which slaves are insufficient or not appropriate.

Composition of the Army

Each of the seven noble families raises a number of troops as directed by the Council of nobles. These forces are grouped into Tséhlqu, which are composed of three to five smaller formations called Nchésh. Each Nchésh comprises combat units of various arms, armor, and function. For Legions of Tékel, we have tended to group similarly equipped soldiers into combat units.

Despite this semi-feudal structure, the central government has encouraged the families to contribute forces to particularly troublesome spots. The border with Tsolyánu and the areas near Ssuyál, for example, are patrolled by units from various of the families. This arrangement is favored by many as the military commanders view this as good opportunities for training, the soldiers can earn loot and prestige, while the central government has diverse troops under its more direct command.

The Salarvyáni army is composed of various sorts of units, including Legions of Heavy Infantry, Medium Infantry, Light Infantry, Marines, Artillery, and Nonhuman auxiliaries. These forces are all presented by noble family and Tséhlqu.

The table below shows the number of units recommended for a proportionally balanced army, based on the composition of the entire Salarvyáni army. For example, in a force of 12 units, at most four of them should be Heavy Infantry and four should be Medium Infantry. Again, as noted previously, this is merely a guideline and deviations from this ideal would be very common.

The Army of Shényu

Command

From this section you may select the Generals and heroes for your army.

Hrg-Ssá

Shényu legions (Gá-Hr) are organized by regional egg-groups. Each region is commanded by a war-council (Hrg-Ssá) with the Hrg-Ssá of Ssorvá being the supreme council over all the others. All of the egg-groups in Shényu are friendly to one another and so, theoretically, a large army composed of Gá-Hr from various regions would be possible.

Shén commanders do not generally stand upon diases, and so have more limited command and control than human commanders. Shén command groups are not protected by magic, however, like their human counter part, the Shén consider it bad form to attack command groups with artillery or lightning bringers. The Shén command groups commonly join units and fight in combat.

Heroes

Heroes often represent groups of player characters who are not part of the the command units. These units may have a small effect on the battle, but it is still outsized compared to that actual number of beings represented.

You may have up to 2 Heroes selected from the options below.

The Army

Your army is composed of one or more combat units. The stats for each legion (Gá-Hr) are shown in the tables that follow. The Shényu forces are organized according to the regional egg groups. Forces raised within a region are under the command of the Hrg-Ssá council. Note that Gá-Hr are rather small compared to human legions, consisting of only 2401 Shén troopers per unit. For that reason, their stats are not so much different from the larger human units. So, an army of 12 Gá-Hr would be less than half the size of a Mu'ugalavyáni army of the same number of units!

Here are some guidelines for assembling your Shényu army for Legions of Téकुmel:

- * You may only have one of a particular “named” unit. Each Shényu Gá-Hr is listed and described below. These are unique units.
- * There are no levies or other para-military units in the Shényu army. All the city and road guards are drawn from the standing Gá-Hr of the egg-group armies.

Composition of the Army

The Shényu army is composed of various sorts of units, including Legions of Heavy Infantry, Medium Infantry, Light Infantry (armed with crossbows, especially the pistol crossbow much favored by the Shén), and Artillery. These forces are all presented by regional egg group in which they are based.

The table below shows the number of units recommended for a proportionally balanced army, based on the composition of the entire Shényu army. For example, in a force of 12 units, at most three of them should be Heavy Infantry and two should be Medium Infantry. Compared to the other major powers, the Livyáni have a higher percentage of Light troops. Again, as noted previously, this is merely a guideline and deviations from this ideal would be very common.
